A charging device for internal combustion engines includes a compressor part configured to compress drawn-in combustion air. The compressor part is arranged in an intake line of the internal combustion engine and is connected to the internal combustion engine via an actuatable mechanical coupler. An expansion part is disposed in a circulation system for a circulating working medium. The circulation system includes at least one exhaust-gas heat exchanger and a circulation pump such that the ...

combustion engine; this necessitates the use of a gas producer, in which some of the heat will be lost, though not as much as in the case of the boiler. In an internal combustion engine, the charge (air mixed with combustible gas or vaporized liquid in correct proportion) is drawn into the cylinder by the piston.

INTERNAL COMBUSTION ENGINES

Internal Combustion Engines ... Charge Stratification Since most of the times the engine runs at part load and maximum power output conditions, these obstacles need to be overcome. This is attempted by charge stratification- it is an engine midway between homogeneous charge SI and heterogeneous charge CI engines. Charge stratification means providing different F/A mixtures at various places in ...
