Clinical Biochemistry | Circulating Nucleic Acids

Abstract Circulating nucleic acids (CNA) are present in small amounts in the plasma of healthy individuals. However, increased levels of plasma CNA have been reported in a number of clinical disorders like cancer, stroke, trauma, myocardial infarction, autoimmune disorders, and pregnancy-associated complications. CNA has received special attention because of

During tumor development, tumor cells release their nucleic acids into the blood circulation. This process occurs by apoptotic and necrotic cell deaths along with active cell secretion, resulting ...

(PDF) Circulating nucleic acids as biomarkers in breast cancer

Circulating nucleic acids are present in the blood of humans and other vertebrates. During the last 10 years researchers actively studied cell-free nucleic acids present in plasma or serum with ...

Circulating nucleic acids in cancer and pregnancy

Circulating nucleic acids in plasma and serum of cancer patients and the mutations detected in them have gained immense importance in this field. Circulating nucleic acids (CNAs) include DNA, RNA, nucleosomal DNA, microRNA, viral DNA. This review focuses on circulating DNA, its origin and mechanism of release, its diagnostic and prognostic utility, association with any of the clinic ...

During tumor development, tumor cells release their nucleic acids into the blood circulation. This process occurs by apoptotic and necrotic cell deaths along with active cell secretion, resulting in high levels of circulating DNA, mRNA, and microRNA in the blood of patients with breast cancer.

Circulating nucleic acids as biomarkers in breast cancer

Free-circulating nucleic acids, such as tumor-specific extracellular DNA fragments and mRNAs in the blood or fetal nucleic acids in maternal blood, are present in serum or plasma usually as short fragments, <1000 bp (DNA) or <1000 nt (RNA).

The presence of DNA and RNA circulating in human plasma and serum is described. The known sources of the DNA/RNA in blood, the ability of these nucleic acids to enter other cells and to express in the recipient cells are considered along with their relationship to metastases.
